NAAIA National Announces Kamilah Brown as National Program Manager

Washington, DC – The National African American Insurance Association (NAAIA) is thrilled to announce the appointment of Kamilah Brown as its National Program Manager.

Brown brings a wealth of experience in program management and systems design to her new role at NAAIA. Recently, she served as an adjunct instructor and learning facilitator for Emeritus, a cybersecurity program developed by

MIT. Prior, she held roles at Houston Community College and the National Nuclear Security Administration where she spearheaded STEM education programs and talent pipeline development, bridging the gap from K12 to college and college to career.

"We are delighted to welcome Kamilah to the NAAIA family," said Omari Jahi Aarons, NAAIA National Executive Director & Chief Operating Officer. "Her deep love of continuous learning and professional development will be invaluable as we continue expanding our program offerings to deliver even greater value to our members."

As NAAIA's National Program Manager, Kamilah will be responsible for orchestrating the planning, execution, and measurement of national and regional events, ensuring the scalability and sustainable growth of NAAIA's leadership and professional development programming.

Brown is a proud graduate of Voorhees College and Norfolk State University.
